The pioneering work of social scientists such as George Simmel and, particularly, Max Weber, established the methodological paradigm of "interpretivism". Weber referred to the 'verstehen' approach of "interpretation". Through the work of more contemporary scholars, such as Jurgen Habermas, Zygmunt Bauman and J K Gibson-Graham, interpretive methodologies have been applied beyond sociology and anthropology to economics and the study of business. In this session, Tony Bradley will, briefly, give a background to interpretivism. Then, using some of his own research and that of other scholars of economic geography, society and business, he will show how interpretivism can be used as a key to unlock qualitative research methods. These can be used to help faculty and research scholars investigate and understand the world of meanings that shape how business, economics and societies are changing very rapidly, within today's crisis-ridden world.
